A Six-Year-Old Heroine. Says a Newport special of Tuesday to the New York World, Naval officers and others will be proud of a 6-year-old daughter of Lieutenant Riley, one of the members of the class under instruction at the torpedo station.

The little miss, in a most critical moment, to-day, showed that she was possessed of remarkable presence of mind under the most trying circumstances. At the torpedo station there is a large float, used for the steam-launches. The little girl, 6 years old, was sitting on the float. The elder accidentally slipped and fell overboard. A heartrending cry went up. No help was near. The elder girl, in order to get a more secure hold of her sister, who was struggling in the water, threw herself down on the float, face downward, and held her sister until, by her assistance, she was able to climb up to the float again.

SOMETHING OF CITY LIFE.

J. A. Augustus

It is sad to see a lovely woman, proud and jealous of her own beauty, and confident that it will free her from any difficulty and insure her success in whatever she undertakes so far as men are concerned, turned down. It happened yesterday, though.

Some people will remember that a few short weeks ago a house located on U street was raided, and the yellow proprietress was passing the summer at Warden Crocker's sanatorium. Yesterday the furniture was being removed from the house, a First Precinct roomman and Sergeant Doyle looking on. A former inmate of the house arrived on the scene, and her superabundance of beer, caused by the hot weather, led her to make remarks in a loud and boisterous voice that were prejudicial to the peace and quiet of the neighborhood and its relations with the police force.

She was requested, and even advised to "shut up," but heeded not. Then she was promised that if she did not stop she would be arrested.

"I don't care if you do 'rest me,' she said, or rather shouted. "Use 'Proddy Lulu,' an' I won't be in 'n' station house five minutes if you don't 'rest me.' I dare you to 'rest me.'"

She was accommodated, and despite her cries and even curses, she was taken to the Twelfth-Street Station House.

While there she made divers irregular propositions to the officers, but they proved Joseph in their intractability, and the sad sequel was enacted before Police Judge Miller this morning, when "Proddy Lulu" went down in default of a $50 fine.

The police census is a great institution. The other day a census policeman knocked at the door of a lady's apartment on a quiet side street of a Dutch saloon on a quiet side street of a Dutch saloon.

The saloon-keeper's wife stuck her head out of a window and said: "What you want?" "Where is Mr. —?" I want to see how many people live here."

"You been here already three times to-day and don't you know how many people live here?"

That settled the census-taker. "This is killing me," sighed a heretic driver. "I not only have to drive three horses on my new horse, but I have to drive three horses on my new horse, but I have to drive three horses on my new horse."

Both, besides having to look the other way when the girls that ride on top go up and down the fire escapes. It is terrible.

WEST WASHINGTON. Arthur Johnson, colored, was arrested last night by Officer Welch, charged with an affray at the corner of Thirtieth and M streets.

Mr. John Sebastian, a bricklayer, fell from a scaffold this morning when he was at work on the South Washington, and was seriously hurt. He was taken to the Garfield Hospital. The injured man is the son of Officer Sebastian of this precinct.

THE ATLANTIC TREE.

A Correspondent Who Calls for Its Extirpation.

Enron Carries The stench from the blossoms of the "atlantica," or more properly speaking, the atlantica tree, is horrible; yet there is a row of them on Sixth street, opposite the railroad depot, enough to drive away sensitive strangers, who receive such a welcome, and a number of them one needs in walking toward the Capitol on Pennsylvania avenue.

They are horrid and ought to be extirpated. I remember when they were first brought over from China and were supposed to be a desirable acquisition to our borders, as they grow quickly, have great vitality and make a good appearance as a shade tree. But they are among the latest to show their leaves in spring, lose their foliage with the first frost, and when in blossom, have a most nauseating smell. Who is it that has charge of the trees in this, our national city? It cannot be denied that there are many trees here, but the kind of trees are often the very worst that could have been selected.

The holly holly or osage has been extensively planted. When the blossoms of that tree have matured the seeds fill the air to the great detriment of weak lungs.

Nothing can be said against the maple and the elm, but why do we not have our noble fruit trees, the chestnut, the hickory, the butternut, the black walnut and the splendid pecan? Who is responsible for the horrid atlantica?

Not on the Map. "I see," said Mr. Stockman of Chicago, reaching down a geography from the book case, "I see that the President has decided to establish, by means of vessels of the revenue marine, a national patrol along the coast of the United States, as far as practicable."

"Where is practicable?" inquired Mrs. Stockman, looking up from her painting. "It's just that the President is looking for a place to put down the map," said Mr. Stockman.

Take Parasols as another illustration of how prices get down. It has been a very hard season for the manufacturers, as the bad weather of May interfered with the demand and prevented merchants from reordering.

As a consequence, they have been compelled to sell at auction and private sale at the best prices they could get. While in New York last week we were offered a lot very cheap, as we thought, at $1.50 each. But within an hour, visiting another manufacturer, who was more anxious to sell, saw precisely the same thing, and made him an offer for the lot, which would enable us to sell them at $1.50 at a fair profit. To our surprise the offer was accepted, and the parasols are now on sale, and way below first cost.
